

EMMA

Emma Woodhouse was handsome, clever and rich, with a comfortable home and happy disposition. She seemed to unite some of the best blessings of existence; and had lived nearly twenty one years in the world with very little to distress or vex her. That is, until the day her governess of sixteen years, the dutiful Miss Taylor, was to be married. It was on this fateful day that Emma, whether from haste or excitement, neglected to cleanse her hands properly after using the lavatory. During the reception, she served the guests cake, and the entire wedding party had the terrible misfortune of eating it and becoming ill with a nasty bacterial infection.

This convenient reading material is brought to you by Jane Austen and the Child Care Health Consultation Program who remind you to Please Wash Your Hands With Soap and Water